

Dear Families,

As we head into summer break, I wanted to share a free resource library that you may find helpful if you would like your child to continue practicing skills at home throughout the summer months.

The Little Minds at Work Freebies Library includes a large collection of printable activities, worksheets, games, phonics practice, math review, writing activities, and hands-on learning resources for preschool through elementary students.

You can access the free library here:
<https://littlemindsatwork.org/freebies>

The resources are completely optional and are simply meant to provide families with easy learning opportunities that can be used whenever it works best for your schedule. Some families like to print a few pages each week, use activities during quiet time, add practice into a summer routine, or keep extra learning materials available for rainy days, travel, or extra review before the next school year begins.

One helpful feature of the site is the label section located along the right side of the page. These labels allow you to quickly search by skill, topic, grade level, or learning area. For example, you can easily find resources for:

- Phonics and reading skills
- Math review and number sense
- Writing activities
- Seasonal learning activities
- Fine motor practice
- And many other skill areas

Using the labels can help you choose activities that match the exact skills your child is currently learning, reviewing, or needing additional support with. Summer learning does not need to feel overwhelming or time consuming. Even a few minutes of meaningful practice each week can help students maintain important skills and build confidence before returning to school. I hope these free resources help make learning at home simple, flexible, and enjoyable for your family this summer.

Wishing you a safe, relaxing, and wonderful summer break!
